

Extract from CropEnergies press announcement: 17 May 2016

The CropEnergies executive board has decided to start up the bioethanol plant in Wilton, UK, for a trial run starting in July 2016 at the latest. The plant has been offline following a pause in production since February 2015. During this time, numerous technical modifications have been carried out to improve the reliability and energy efficiency of the plant. These improvements, following their completion, need to be fully tested in a trial run.
